

How do I find appropriate support for my child with ASD so that I can get a break?

Parenting a child with autism spectrum disorder (ASD) can be stressful at times. It is important as a caregiver to take care of yourself so that you are able to take care of your child and family. This includes making time to spend with your significant other and friends separate from your child. Respite is care that allows you to get a much-needed break from caring for your child. Respite care can be funded through the Family Support for Children with Disabilities (FSCD) program.

- Think in practical and realistic terms about what type of respite would work best for your family.
- Plan regular breaks and put them into your schedule.
- Think about the type of caregiver that could best provide support
- Respite can be provided inside or outside of the family's home.
- Check the resources below and/or the job boards or websites of universities and colleges. You can post a job profile on these websites indicating the hours and days that you require support.
